Claims

1.   A method for generating an identity authentication code associated with an authentication device, comprising the steps of:

storing an event state in an authentication device; modifying the event state in response to a reportable event; and generating an identity authentication code that depends at least in part on (i) a dynamic value, (ii) the event state, and (iii) a secret associated with the device.